

J. Malcolm DeVoy IV (Nevada Bar No. 11950)
Marc J. Randazza (Application for pro hac vice admission pending)
RANDAZZA LEGAL GROUP
jmd@Randazza.com
mjr@Randazza.com
7001 W. Charleston Boulevard, # 1043
Las Vegas, NV 89117
Telephone: 888-667-1113
Facsimile: 305-437-7662

Ronald D. Coleman (Application for pro hac vice admission pending)
GOETZ FITZPATRICK LLP
rcoleman@goetzfitz.com
1 Penn Plaza – Suite 4401
New York, NY 10119
Telephone: 212-695-8100
Facsimile: 212-629-4013

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae,
Media Bloggers Association

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEVADA

RIGHTHAVEN, LLC, a Nevada limited liability company,

Plaintiff,

vs.

BILL HYATT, an individual

Defendant.

Case No. 2:10-cv-01736-KJD-RJJ

BRIEF OF *AMICUS CURIAE
MEDIA BLOGGERS ASSOCIATION

AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF

I. Introduction

Righthaven is a Nevada LLC (hereinafter, “Righthaven”) with the most questionable of business models. It was formed by an attorney who, instead of simply representing copyright plaintiffs in justifiable cases, chose to create an entirely champertous enterprise out of unsound copyright claims. Its “business model” is to seek out unwitting and, perhaps, careless bloggers

1 who have used portions of the Las Vegas Review Journal in online discussions. Once
 2 Righthaven finds these uses by conducting internet “sweeps,” it fallaciously “acquires” the rights
 3 to the articles in question, essentially as causes of action, solely for the purpose of filing a 4 lawsuit.

5 The vast majority of the victims of this scheme are under the impression that by giving 6 proper attribution to a source, they are within their rights to use such excerpts. Almost none of 7 them could ever afford legal representation; flummoxed by the threat of a $150,000 potential 8 statutory damage award – an amount that it can safely be said none of them could dream of 9 satisfying – and lacking even a clue as to whom to turn to for advice, many will simply default.

10 Righthaven now seeks to turn a default into a windfall by asking this Court to grant it a 11 constitutionally impermissible and outrageous award of at least $30,000 in statutory damages,
 12 ranging up to $150,000.00 in this matter, in addition to $1,850.00 in costs and attorney’s fees<sup>1</sup> – 13 all based on specious infringement claims for forgotten newspaper articles whose economic 14 value is surely orders of magnitude below these astronomical sums.

15 Righthaven’s assertion of itself as the plaintiff in these suits is dubious, abusive, and 16 contrary to the Copyright Act’s intent. In order to sue for copyright infringement, one must own
 17 the copyright or be the owner, assignee or licensee of an “exclusive” copyright right found in 17
 18 U.S.C. § 106. Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1145-46 (9th Cir. 2008); 19 Silvers v. Sony Pictures Entmt., Inc., 402 F.3d 881, 887 (9th Cir. 2005) (“only owners of an 20 exclusive right in a copyright may sue”). The right to sue is not considered an exclusive and 21 intrinsic right, and can only be asserted by a bona fide owner, assignee, or licensee of an 22 exclusive copyright right. Sybersound, 517 F.3d at 1146. In short, contrary to the entire premise
 23 of the Righthaven enterprise, copyright owners are not permitted to assign their rights to sue 24 independent of their ownership of the work sued upon. Silvers, 402 F.3d at 884 (holding that the 25 right to sue is not an exclusive, assignable right under 17 U.S.C. § 106).

26
 27
 28 <sup>1</sup> See 17 U.S.C. §§ 412, 504(c), 505.

1 If the Las Vegas Review-Journal (hereinafter, the “LVRJ”) or its parent company,
2 Stephens Media LLC (hereinafter, “Stephens Media”), were the plaintiffs in these cases, this 3 argument would not apply. But Righthaven’s exercise in champerty seeks to make an end-run 4 around the rule of law limiting the right to sue for copyright infringement to creators and those 5 legitimate enterprises that make creativity possible and protectable. Nobody can seriously
6 believe that Righthaven, which publishes nothing anywhere, has acquired the full ownership of 7 the articles it sues upon. The assignments it secures – only after finding “infringed” articles to 8 sue over – contain mysterious (and heretofore unexamined) language about a “right of reversion”
9 which, on frank consideration, demonstrates how transparently illegitimate these “assignments” 10 are.

11 Phony “assignments” are not the only venal and manipulative aspects of the Righthaven
12 scheme. By design, Righthaven sues mostly retirees who, terrified of losing their retirement
13 savings, generally settle their cases quickly and without discovery. But this Court should not 14 restrain its own duty to inquire into the underlying law and facts on which both Righthaven’s
15 claims and Righthaven’s coerced settlements are based when considering its decision on 16 damages in this case. This Court should hold serious doubts about the propriety of Righthaven 17 bringing these suits with rights obtained from a third party that has no stated stake in this 18 litigation or related cases. Either the LVRJ and Stephens Media are “selling lawsuits,” which is 19 impermissible under Silvers, 402 F. 3d at 884-85, or Righthaven is simply a law firm in disguise,
20 engaged in champerty, which is impermissible in Nevada, as it is almost everywhere legal ethics
21 and fundamental justice are a concern of the law. Schwartz v. Eliades, 113 Nev. 586, 589 (Nev.
22 1997); Lum v. Stinnett, 87 Nev. 402, 408 (Nev. 1971). Without revealing exactly what exclusive
23 rights Righthaven has acquired in the works, if acquiring any at all, Righthaven essentially buys
24 the bare right to sue for copyright infringement – which purchase is banned by copyright law –
25 and uses it to sue small website operators by the hundreds. Left unchallenged, Righthaven’s 26 practices create a secondary commodities market for copyrights, or exclusive subsidiary rights in 27 copyrights, to be used only in suing others who may have valid defenses, but cannot afford to

1 raise them – or engage counsel whatsoever, as is the situation in this case. This is inimical to the 2 purpose of the Copyright Act, which was intended to protect the intellectual investments of 3 creators, rather than creating lawsuit mills that use registered copyrights – only after their 4 infringement was discovered – as a source of income, rather than a shield against others’
5 misappropriation. See Silvers, 402 F.3d at 886.

6 In every Righthaven case, Righthaven discovered a small website or blogger’s use of an 7 article – which very well may have been fair use – and then claimed to acquire the story’s rights,
8 followed by a copyright registration and federal lawsuit. This case follows the same formula. A 9 LVRJ article was published in print and on the LVRJ’s website. Thereafter, a blogger – Hyatt –
10 posted a copy of it to his website. (See Doc. # 1.) Righthaven’s Complaint alleges that the 11 LVRJ published “FX’s manly man shows hold outsider appeal” (hereinafter, the “Article”) on or 12 about September 5, 2010, and Hyatt republished this article on his website, <1ce.org>, on or 13 about September 8, 2010. (Doc. # 1 ¶¶ 6, 9, 18, 20; Doc. # 1. Exhs. 1, 2.) On October 6, 2010, 14 approximately one month after discovering this infringement – but before filing suit –
15 Righthaven registered the article’s Copyright. (Doc. # 1 ¶ 19; Doc. # 1 Exh. 3.)

16 Hyatt failed to respond to Righthaven’s Complaint (Doc. # 1), leading Righthaven to 17 bring the Motion currently before this Court. (Doc. # 17.) While this Court determines the 18 outcome of the Motion, the Media Bloggers Association (hereinafter the “Amicus”) seeks to 19 provide additional information to the Court and assist it reach a reasonable, just conclusion in 20 disposing of this case, as its membership frequently copies portions of newspaper articles in 21 order to foster discussion on matters of public concern. Amicus closely follows these issues and 22 its participation in cases such as this one is integral to its mission of protecting the legal rights of 23 bloggers, writers and other citizen journalists. A constitutionally bizarre award in this case, such 24 as that sought by the Righthaven enterprise, will create a chilling effect across the membership of 25 Amicus, thus reducing the amount of discourse on matters of public concern generally.

II. Argument

Righthaven's business model belies its argument for a large damage award against Hyatt, as well as an award of attorney's fees and costs. The monetary relief Righthaven seeks from Hyatt is so astronomical and disproportionate that this Court should limit it under the Due Process clause of the Constitution. The other form of relief Righthaven seeks, a turnover of Hyatt's domain name, is not available in Copyright cases, and it is high time that a court tell Righthaven so. Righthaven's desired relief should be denied in all cases, except for money damages, in which case its desired award should be reduced to nominal damages in the smallest amount allowed by law. Amicus' experience and depth of information in working with and representing bloggers lends an especially useful perspective to analyzing how this Court's award of damages to Righthaven would be devastating not only to Hyatt, but the blogging community as a whole.

A. Righthaven's Business Model Does Not Support a Significant Damage Award, or Award of Attorney's Fees, Against Hyatt.

Righthaven's business model is simple, cynical, and ethically questionable. Righthaven finds instances of infringement relating to newspaper articles and pictures of essentially trivial economic value on blogs and other small websites without significant readership, advertising or other resources. After finding these instances of infringement, Righthaven purports to purchase the rights to the allegedly infringed work from Stephens Media, which for some reason does not have the confidence in its case to place its name on the complaints as a plaintiff.

These agreements between Stephens Media and Righthaven do not identify what Rights Righthaven has purchased. A true and correct copy of the assignment of rights from Stephens Media to Righthaven for the article "Marijuana as Medicine," is attached hereto as Exhibit 1. This is impermissible within the Ninth Circuit, as courts have held that the six rights inherent in an owner's valid copyright<sup>2</sup> cannot be unbundled from the right to sue for infringement. Sybersound, 517 F.3d at 1145-46; Silvers, 402 F.3d at 887. An exclusive ownership interest,

---

<sup>2</sup> 17 U.S.C. § 106.

1 assignment or license of an exclusive copyright right under 17 U.S.C. § 106 is required for 2 Righthaven to be able to sue alleged copyright infringers. Sybersound, 517 F.3d at 1145-46;
 3 Silvers, 402 F.3d at 887. Without specifying what rights transfer from Stephens Media to 4 Righthaven, Exhibit 1 shows that Righthaven acquires only the copyrights “requisite” to be 5 recognized as the copyright owner of the work for the purposes of claiming ownership and 6 seeking redress for past and future infringement. (Exh. 1 at 1.) No rights are identified or 7 explained, and Righthaven impermissibly purchases only those rights necessary to give it
 8 standing to sue those who infringed on that article – without any mention of exclusivity. (Id.)
 9 Meanwhile, these very articles that Righthaven claims to have acquired the rights to are still 10 available for sale in the LVRJ’s archives. Declaration of J. Malcolm DeVoy ¶¶ 2-7.

11 Righthaven’s agreements with Stephens Media include a mysterious “right of reversion” 12 that allows whatever rights Righthaven does acquire to revert back to Stephens Media under 13 circumstances unspecified in the parties’ written agreement.<sup>3</sup> (Id.) This raises serious questions
 14 as to whether Righthaven truly owns the copyright at all, as it can revert to Stephens Media 15 under unexplained circumstances. To date, this is the only copyright assignment that Amicus has 16 seen from Righthaven, and likely the only one seen by the Court, as no other Righthaven cases
 17 have advanced to the discovery phase of litigation. Amicus – and to the best of Amicus’
 18 knowledge, this Court – has no definitive knowledge as to what rights Stephens Media transfers
 19 to Righthaven in these agreements other than an attempt to impermissibly assign the bare right to 20 sue. Based on Exhibit 1, there is serious doubt as to whether these rights are exclusive as 21 required by copyright law in order to be enforceable, and whether these rights even permit
 22 Righthaven to sue others for alleged instances of copyright infringement.

23 The logical inference from what is known of Righthaven’s acquisition of these copyright
 24 rights from Stephens Media and their conduct in litigation is that Righthaven uses these rights
 25 only to sue others. Righthaven has no interest in protecting Stephens Media’s content, and uses
 26

---

27 <sup>3</sup> To date, Righthaven seems to have carefully chosen its victims in order to avoid litigating its cases against anyone 28 with the resources to pursue discovery, including depositions of former LVRJ Publisher Sherman Frederick, these copyrights acquired – with a reversion to Stephens Media – simply to sue small site operators for illusory damages. This is not to say the articles are worthless: In fact, while they are available online for free, the LVRJ attempts to sell each article available on its website for the handsome sum of $2.95. A true and correct copy of the purchase screen for LVRJ articles, including that for the Article at issue in this case, is attached as Exhibit 2; see DeVoy decl. ¶¶ 3-5, 6-7. It is unknown what ratio of people who view these stories purchase them, or what the LVRJ's profit margin is from these article sales at $2.95 each; to date, Righthaven has not produced any evidence addressing either of these margins – nor would it likely be able to do so, if any defendant had the resources to vindicate its rights in these cases.
 Righthaven CEO Steve Gibson, and other officers of Stephens Media and Righthaven with relevant information.

These reversionary, vaguely worded agreements between Righthaven and Stephens Media additionally suggest that the two are not engaged in an arm's length relationship with respect to Righthaven's acquisition of Stephens Media's copyright rights. (Exh 1 at 1.) These agreements further evidence that damage-recovery litigation is the sole purpose of Righthaven's existence, rather than any anti-piracy enforcement of rights in content Righthaven produces or owns. As such, Righthaven has no entitlement to damages, especially large damages, as the bare right to sue cannot be acquired without other specific, exclusive rights in the copyrighted material. Sybersound, 517 at 1143-44. Even if the litigated uses were infringing, Righthaven acquired its rights to sue for infringement with knowledge that a possible infringement existed as part of its business model, and should not be accorded the full rights of a copyright owner, assignee or licensee using the content for expressive purposes. Id.

When Righthaven first began suing others for alleged infringements, Sherman Frederick, then-Publisher of the LVRJ,<sup>4</sup> analogized the defendants' use of the LVRJ's content to driving away with his Corvette.<sup>5</sup> Interestingly enough, Mr. Frederick's company never sued to enforce its rights, but rather decided to commoditize those rights, transferring them to Righthaven for <sup>4</sup> J. Patrick Coolican, Review-Journal Publisher Sherman Frederick, Editor Thomas Mitchell Out, Las Vegas Sun (Nov. 12, 2010), available at <http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2010/nov/12/review-journal-publisher-sherman-frederick-editor-/> (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011).

<sup>5</sup> Sherman Frederick, Copyright theft: We're Not Taking It Anymore, Las Vegas Review-Journal (May 28, 2010), available at http://www.lvrj.com/blogs/sherm/Copyright\_theft\_Were\_not\_taking\_it\_anymore.html (last accessed Feb. 20, 2011).

1 unexplained reasons. To continue the car analogy, Righthaven's model is the equivalent of 2 buying broken cars in order to sue whoever may have damaged them prior to the sale. In short,
3 Righthaven is engaged in a callow use of the Copyright Act to create a litigation brokerage – not 4 to vindicate rights envisioned by the Copyright Clause.

5 As Righthaven has no legitimate interest in whatever copyright rights it possesses in the 6 Article, and other articles and photos it putatively acquires the rights to, Righthaven is entitled to 7 no more than nominal damages – if that. Righthaven is not a content producer trying to preserve
8 its relevant market from the unceasing raids of content pirates, but a dedicated litigation house 9 that acquires rights from other entities solely to sue essentially defenseless “infringers” for their 10 supposed infringement. If Stephens Media or the LVRJ had sued to protect content it produced 11 and the market for it, an argument for more than nominal damages might be tenable.
12 Righthaven, however, has not suffered any financial harm whatsoever from the infringement it
13 alleges – for if any damages occurred, they occurred before Righthaven procured the copyright.
14 Righthaven's damages, if any, should be only enough to observe that infringement occurred.
15 Righthaven does not suffer any harm from lost profits or a lost market for the work, as it does not 16 produce or sell content, but merely acquires rights in it to file lawsuits such as this one, and if 17 this Court awards Righthaven its outrageous demand, it will simply throw gasoline on the fire of 18 Righthaven's unethical copyright trolling and attorney-fee-generation scheme.

19 This model, if sustained by law and emboldened by this Court granting Righthaven the 20 damages it seeks, poses a singular and unique threat to Amicus' membership. The interests of 21 bloggers acting under Amicus' umbrella will be adversely affected by any award of damages
22 granted to an entity that collects illusory copyright rights for the sole purpose of litigation.
23 Those served by Amicus will have no idea how to protect themselves from costly litigation 24 against a party they could not have foreseen acquiring copyright rights, and thus will limit their 25 liability by taking the safest, least creative path of minimal resistance: The path of silence. Such 26 an award would contract the marketplace of ideas, especially online, depriving the group served 27

1 by Amicus of expression and harming others' access to information about newsworthy and 2 timely subjects.

3 Simultaneously, Amicus' membership possesses legitimate copyrights that they 4 themselves have cultivated and may seek to protect from infringement in the future. These 5 efforts will require litigation against infringers, which Amicus fears courts will meet with a 6 jaundiced eye after witnessing the way in which Righthaven litigates its cases, including this one.
7 Thus, content creators and other legitimate copyright holders fear that Righthaven's business
8 practices and legal tactics will poison the well of judicial relief, making courts and the public
9 skeptical of copyright infringement cases<sup>6</sup> – even where the original creators of copyrighted 10 works sue in good faith to defend their creations and preserve the marketplace in which they are 11 sold.

12 Moreover, as Righthaven is designed solely to acquire rights and litigate them, it does not 13 deserve the attorneys' fees and costs awards granted to content producers who must undertake

---

14 <sup>6</sup> For as long as Righthaven has existed, its lawsuits and tactics have received significant and sustained media
15 criticism both locally and nationally. See, e.g., Steve Green, Flood of Righthaven Copyright Lawsuits Lifts Total to 16 225, Las Vegas Sun (Jan 28, 2011), available at http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2011/jan/28/flood-righthaven-
17 copyright-lawsuits-lifts-total-22/ (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Steve Green, Blogger, Websites Sued by Righthaven
18 Over 'TSA Advanced Patdown' Photo, Las Vegas Sun (Jan. 24, 2011), available at 19 <http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2011/jan/24/blogger-websites-sued-righthaven-over-tsa-enhanced/> (last accessed 20 Feb. 22, 2011); Steve Green, Righthaven Extends Copyright Lawsuit Campaign to Individual Web Posters, Las
21 Vegas Sun (Jan. 12, 2011), available at http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2011/jan/12/righthaven-extends-
22 copyright-lawsuit-campaign-indi/ (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Steve Green, Ties Between Stephens Media, 23 Righthaven Copyright Lawsuit at Issue, Las Vegas Sun (Dec. 8, 2010), available at 24 <http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2010/dec/08/ties-between-stephens-media-righthaven-copyright-l/> (last accessed 25 Feb. 22, 2011); David Kravets, Righthaven Expands Troll Operation with Newspaper Giant, Wired (Dec. 7, 2010),
26 available at <http://www.wired.com/threatlevel/2010/12/righthaven-expands-trolling/> (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011);
27 Steve Green, Judge to Righthaven: Show Why Lawsuit Shouldn't Be Dismissed, Las Vegas Sun (Nov. 22, 2010),
28 available at <http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2010/nov/22/judge-righthaven-show-why-lawsuit-shouldnt-be-dism/>
(last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); David Kravets, EFF Sues Newspaper Chain's Copyright Troll, Wired (Sept. 29, 2010), <http://www.wired.com/threatlevel/2010/09/righthaven-sham/> (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Mike Masnick,
23 Righthaven Continues to Stretch the meaning of Copyright Law in Filing Lawsuits, Techdirt (Aug. 12, 2010),
24 <http://www.techdirt.com/articles/20100812/01454910601.shtml> (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Steve Green, 25 Websites, Bloggers Make Moves to Avoid Righthaven Lawsuits, Las Vegas Sun (Aug. 9, 2010), available at 26 <http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2010/aug/09/websites-bloggers-make-moves-avoid-righthaven-laws/> (last 27 accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Steve Green, Some Targets of Righthaven Lawsuits Fighting Back, Las Vegas Sun (Aug. 4, 2010), available at <http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2010/aug/04/some-targets-righthaven-lawsuits-fighting-back/>
28 (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Mike Masnick, Righthaven Ramping up its Copyright Trolling Business, Techdirt
(July 23, 2010), <http://www.techdirt.com/articles/20100722/03152710320.shtml> (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011); Mike
Masnick, Newspaper Publisher Defends Filing 22 Copyright Lawsuits Against Sites Who Copied Text... With Links
Back, Techdirt (June 4, 2010), <http://www.techdirt.com/articles/20100604/0425069685.shtml> (last accessed Feb. 22, 2011).

1 legal action to arrest infringement. Righthaven's litigation-factory model accounts for, or should
 2 account for, the costs of litigation. Righthaven does nothing but find infringements (before 3 acquiring and registering the relevant copyright) and sue on them. As the sole purpose of 4 Righthaven is to incur the costs of costs litigation, recovering costs and attorneys' fees from a
 5 defendant in this and similar cases is unseemly. These are not the costs borne by a copyright 6 holder seeking in good faith to stop rank infringement and widespread piracy of its content.
 7 Instead, any award of attorneys' fees or costs will turn Righthaven's damage award into pure 8 profit, eliminating the costs of litigation inherent in its business model and effectively granting 9 Righthaven an impermissible double recovery. See, e.g., Gypsum Carrier, Inc. v. Handelsman, 10 307 F.2d 525, 535 (9th Cir. 1962).

B. Righthaven is not Entitled to the Relief it Seeks.

1. Due Process Limits Righthaven's Entitlement to Money Damages.

12 The Due Process clause of the U.S. Constitution has long been a source of limitation on 13 all forms of damages awarded in judicial proceedings. Damages beyond those actually suffered 14 by a plaintiff, awarded as a deterrent against similar unlawful acts in the future – known as 15 exemplary damages – have been tightly limited by the courts under the Due Process clause.
 16 Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 499 U.S. 1, 42 (1992); State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. v.
 17 Campbell, 538 U.S. 408, 417 (2003). Because these exemplary damages may become detached 18 from the harm actually caused to the plaintiff by defendant, these awards may fail to serve any 19 legitimate purpose, and instead hold a “devastating potential for harm.” Campbell, 538 U.S. at 20 417.

21 This due process protection is both substantive and procedural in nature. See Id. Courts 22 analyze three figures in relation to any award of exemplary damages to determine whether any 23 such award is grossly excessive:
 24

- 25 1) The degree of reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct;
- 26 2) The disparity between the actual or potential harm suffered by the plaintiff and
- 27 the punitive damages award; and
- 28 3) The difference between the punitive damages awarded by the jury and the civil penalties authorized or imposed in similar cases.

1 Id. at 418; Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Leatherman Tool Group, Inc., 532 U.S. 424, 436 (2001); BMW
 2 of N. Am. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 575 (1996). Though the Court has not yet awarded any 3 damages in this case, the third factor, weighing the difference between awarded damages in this 4 case and the penalties authorized in similar cases, should consider the damages sought by 5 Righthaven in comparison to those authorized in other cases.

6 This analysis and scrutiny applies to the Copyright Act, just as it does to any federal law.
 7 Every act of Congress, including the enactment of the Copyright Act, is subject to due process
 8 limitations on account of the Fifth Amendment's limits on Congress' power. Nebbia v. N.Y., 291
 9 U.S. 502, 510 (1934). These statutory damages allow by the Copyright Act serve the same 10 purpose as punitive damages awarded by a jury (to punish and deter unlawful conduct) and 11 therefore require the same level of constitutional scrutiny.

12 In determining the measure of statutory damages to be awarded, courts consider the 13 following factors:

14 [E]xpenses saved and profits gained by the defendants in connection with the 15 infringements; revenues lost by plaintiffs as a result of defendants' conduct; and the 16 infringer's state of mind, that is, whether willful, knowing, or merely innocent.
 17 Moreover, the court should consider the purposes of the Copyright Act, including 18 restitution to prevent unjust enrichment, reparation of injury, and deterrence of further 19 wrongful conduct by the defendants and others.

20 Walt Disney v. Video, 47, 972 F. Supp. 595, 603 (S.D. Fla. 1996) (citations omitted). "'Willful'
 21 refers to conduct that occurs with knowledge that the defendant's conduct constitutes copyright
 22 infringement.' . . . The determination of willfulness is a question of fact reserved for the jury."
 23 Id. Here there is no basis for the Court to find such willfulness, though. As explained in 24 Nintendo of Am. v. Ketchum, 830 F. Supp. 1443, 1445 (M.D. Fla. 1993), even where willfulness 25 has been established, this is not the end of the inquiry when evaluating the issue of statutory 26 damages

1 [I]n exercising its discretion, the Court may consider several factors including the 2 expenses saved and profits reaped by infringer, revenues lost by copyright holder as a 3 result of infringement, and infringer's state of mind, whether willful, knowing or 4 innocent. . .

5 Although Plaintiff has suggested in its motion that the "Defendants saved substantial
6 license revenue expenses and reaped enormous profits," Plaintiff has offered no evidence
7 of the expenses saved by Defendants for licensing fees, etc. Plaintiff has simply asked 8 this Court for an arbitrary amount of $50,000 per infringement based upon the finding of 9 willful conduct.

10 The fact that the Defendants acted willfully and knowingly has been established by the 11 evidence presented by Plaintiff. Defendant Ketchum has pled guilty to criminal charges
12 in North Carolina of knowingly and intentionally disseminating counterfeit cartridges.
13 Defendant Brinson, owner of Superior Video, has admitted his knowledge that Ketchum 14 and Isom were selling and distributing counterfeit cartridges from his store. Thus the 15 existence of culpable conduct is clear.

16 Taking all of these factors into consideration, along with the purposes of the Copyright 17 Act, this Court finds that the copyright holders are entitled to statutory damages in the 18 amount of $2,000 for each of the twelve infringements, under 17 U.S.C. § 504(c)(2), for a 19 total of $ 24,000.

20 Id. at 1445 (citations omitted). See also, Morley Music Co. v. Cafe Continental, Inc., 777 F.
21 Supp. 1579, 1583 (S.D. Fla. 1991) (upon finding of willfulness and repeated infringement of 22 seven works and defendants' avoidance of "$ 2,582.91 in license fees, the court finds that 23 statutory damages in the amount of $ 1,500 per infringement appropriate").

24 A similar treatment of the matter can be seen in a case from the Southern District of New 25 York, even in the face of the situation that obtains here – a defendant's default. The case 26 involved pirated pay-per-view broadcasts, but the court was unwilling to bring down the wrath of 27

1 heaven in the form of statutory damages when considering the reality of the economic picture at 2 bar:

3 Some courts . . . have concluded that a defendant's default itself could be viewed as 4 evidence of willfulness [or make similar inferences based on profit motive to infringe]. . .
5 [But] the plaintiff has failed to offer credible evidence that an enhanced damages award 6 in the exorbitant amount of $100,000, or something in that range, is necessary to 7 accomplish the goals of the statute, i.e., the use of enhanced damages to alter the 8 economic expectations of prospective violators. Regardless, even in the case of a default 9 judgment, a plaintiff must do more than gesture at an inference to support its request for 10 enhanced damages. Garden City Boxing Club, Inc. v. Ayisah, No. 02-CV-6673, 2004
11 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7867, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. April 28, 2004) ("plaintiff must . . . substantiate 12 a claim with evidence to prove the extent of damages").

13 In addition, the value of deterrence must be balanced against the inequity of imposing 14 heavy financial burdens on small businesses. The sting of an enhanced award should not 15 be greater than deterrence requires and fairness allows. Thus, I award Joe Hand an 16 additional $1,500 in enhanced damages from each defendant. This enhancement is not so 17 large that it will spell financial ruin for the small businesses involved, especially if, as I 18 suggest, Joe Hand allows installment payments over the course of a year or more, but it is 19 large enough to raise the dollar amount of the penalty above the cost of obtaining a 20 commercial license, and, for businesses of this size, should be a sufficient deterrent to 21 avoid future violations.

22 Joe Hand Promotions, Inc. v. Hernandez, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12159 (S.D.N.Y. June 30, 23 2004) (some citations omitted). In so ruling, the court cited Doehrer v. Caldwell, 1980 U.S.
24 Dist. LEXIS 10713 (N.D. Ill. 1980), which taught as follows:

25 A mechanical application of the statutory damage provision of the Copyright Act leads to 26 absurd results. While Section 504's compensatory purpose should not be minimized, its 27 deterrent provisions should not be converted into a windfall where, as a practical matter,

1 the plaintiff has suffered only nominal damages. It is clear from the legislative history of 2 the Copyright Revision Act of 1976 that Section 504 was designed, in part, “to provide
 3 the courts with reasonable latitude to adjust recovery to the circumstances of the case, 4 thus avoiding some of the artificial or overly technical awards resulting from the 5 language of the existing statute.” S. Rep. No. 94-473, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 6 CCH Copyright Revision Act of 1976 P2042. . . .

7 The fact that statutory damages are not to be regarded as penalties, and that their purpose 8 is to permit a wronged plaintiff to recover where there is insufficient proof of actual damages or 9 profits, has been recognized as rising to the level of due process limitations in numerous other
 10 recent copyright cases. Predicated by other courts’ expectations that constitutional due process 11 protections would apply to statutory damages copyright infringement,<sup>7</sup> two courts have used the 12 due process clause to limit the damages available in copyright infringement cases based on users
 13 uploading songs on peer-to-peer networks. In Capitol Records v. Thomas-Rassett, 680 F. Supp.
 14 2d 1045, 1048 (D. Minn. 2010), the court limited the infringer’s damages to $2,250 per 15 infringement – three times the statutory minimum of $750. While the court noted that this was a 16 “significant and harsh” punishment, due process required “some” relationship between the 17 damages suffered by the plaintiff and the damages imposed on the defendant. Id. at 1049, 1053.
 18 The Thomas-Rassett court even noted that the $2,250 cap on damages for infringement was 19 higher than the court would have imposed, but was an appropriate remittitur of the jury’s
 20 $2,000,000 damages award based on plaintiff’s sharing of 24 songs. Id. at 1049.

21 By a similar decision, the District of Massachusetts reaffirmed this $2,250 limitation for 22 instances of willful song sharing in Sony BMG Music Entertainment v. Tenenbaum, 721 F. Supp.
 23 2d 85, 117 (D. Mass. 2010). In her opinion, Judge Gertner held that $2,250 – three times the 24 statutory minimum damages allowed in 17 U.S.C. § 504(c) – was the “outer limit” of damages

25 _____
 26 <sup>7</sup> Centerline Equip. Corp. v. Banner Pers. Serv., Inc., 545 F. Supp. 2d 768, 778 n.6 (N.D. Ill. 2008) (suggesting that
 27 State Farm might provide grounds for reducing statutory damages awarded under the Telephone Consumer
 28 Protection Act); Leiber v. Bertelsmann AG (In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litigation), No. C MDL-00-1369 MHP, C 04-1671 MHP, 2005 WL 1287611, at *10-11 (N.D. Cal. June 1, 2005) (suggesting in dictum that the court would apply Gore and State Farm in considering whether statutory damages for copyright infringement were unconstitutionally excessive).

that could constitutionally be imposed in such a case. 721 F. Supp. 2d at 117. The opinion went on to note that while drawing a line in the sand of $2,250 in song-sharing cases may be controversial, any line-drawing is controversial, even when required by due process and the Constitution. Id. This limitation was based on the evidence adduced at trial regarding the recording studio plaintiffs' actual damages from the defendant's file-sharing, which revealed a damages-to-lost profits ratio between 22,000 and 32,000 to 1, far higher than the 114:1 ratio of punitive to compensatory damages permitted in Williams. Id. at 112-14.

In this case, no evidence of Righthaven's actual damages has been introduced to the court, though it would have to be at least $263.16<sup>8</sup> from Hyatt's infringement alone to remain within Williams' constitutional threshold, reinforced by Tenenbaum. This evidence has not been presented to the Court, and to Amicus' knowledge does not exist, and thus any award of damages in the range sought by Righthaven would be speculative and based wholly on conjecture. Indeed, it strains the imagination to conceive how Righthaven could show any damages, considering that Righthaven acquired the copyright in question only after determining that it the work been used by the defendant. If copyright infringement makes the original work "damaged goods," thus entitling the author to compensation, then damages are appropriate. But, when a get-rich-quick scheme is premised on buying damaged goods after the damage occurs, the get-rich-quick scheme itself should not be compensated for specious "losses" to an "asset" it would never have bought but for the supposed infringement. In fact, it is far from clear that the LVRJ and Stephens Media effectively sold the rights to the work at all. The entire enterprise is so unseemly and questionable that it is not clear that this Court, as a due process matter, should even award the minimum statutory minimum of $750.

It is instructive to consider the one case where the amount Righthaven received to conclude its lawsuit is known, Righthaven LLC v. National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws ("NORML"), in which the defendant filed a Rule 68 offer of judgment for <sup>8</sup> This number was achieved by dividing $30,000 – Righthaven's minimum sought damages – by 114, the factor identified in Williams and Tenenbaum as the threshold for due process to be preserved.  $30,000/114 = 263.157$ , which was rounded up to 16, the smallest sum accounted for by U.S. currency, which would remain under the Williams factor of 114.

$2,185.00. Case No. 2:10-cv-0351, Offer of Judgment, Doc. # 30-1 at 2 (D. Nev. filed Jun. 4, 2010). To arrive at this amount, NORML multiplied the total resale cost of the infringing article – $2.95 – by the 247 people who possibly could have viewed it as a result of NORML’s infringement. Id. NORML did not identify what portion would have been the copyright holder’s profits, but determined the total amount of revenue that could have possibly been lost due to NORML’s actions was $728.65<sup>9</sup>. NORML then tripled this amount, arriving at the amount it offered as judgment: $2,185. Id. at 2. Righthaven accepted this offer of judgment. Case No. 2:10-cv-0351, Acceptance of Offer of Judgment, Doc. # 30 (D. Nev. filed Jun. 4, 2010).

This amount, accepted by Righthaven less than nine months ago as sufficient value for copyright claims virtually identical to those made here, is a mere 7.3%<sup>10</sup> of what Righthaven seeks from Hyatt in damages – by virtue of a default judgment. At the same time, publicly available information reports that the settlement amounts for these Righthaven cases has steadily increased since they began, from $2,000-$3,000, then to $3,000-$5,000, to now, inexplicably, $6,000.<sup>11</sup> Righthaven has not presented a single piece of evidence as to the market damage suffered by it, the LVRJ or Stephens Media due to the allegedly infringing republication of the articles and photos in the cases it has brought before this Court. All of these settlements Righthaven has secured to date are likely to be factors greater than the LVRJ’s or Stephens Media’s lost revenues. These settlements are bound to be an even larger multiple of the LVRJ’s or Stephens Media’s lost profits, which are the copyright holder’s ultimate monetary gain derived from the article’s sale.

Large or small, however, the amounts both procured by Righthaven in other cases and sought by Righthaven in this matter ultimately violate due process. In Tenenbaum and Thomas-Rassett, the courts in those cases found that $2,250 was the outer constitutional limit of damages for knowingly and intentionally sharing songs on a peer-to-peer network, and this intentional

<sup>9</sup> $2.95 multiplied by 247 is $728.65.

<sup>10</sup> 2,185 divided by 30,000 is 7.28333; this amount was rounded to the closest tenth.

<sup>11</sup> “Fairuser,” Price Increase: Righthaven Now Asking Bloggers for $6,000 to Avoid Trial, Righthaven Victims (Feb. 15, 2011), <http://righthavenvictims.blogspot.com/2011/02/price-increase-righthaven-now-asking.html> (last accessed Feb. 20, 2011).

1 sharing of complex media like songs takes place on a network where republication is rampant,
 2 thus exacerbating the damages. This case, as the other Righthaven cases like it, compels a lower
 3 range of damages because of the social function achieved by sharing otherwise stale news stories 4 of trivial economic value and minimal creative content, especially when buttressed by the 5 doctrine of fair use. See Las Angeles News Svc. v. Reuters Tv Int'l, 149 F.3d 987, 994 (9th Cir.
 6 1998) (holding that facts are not subject to copyright). Notwithstanding the presumptions
 7 permitted in a default, as a public policy matter and a matter of judicial integrity, this Court is 8 obliged to consider the underlying merits of the claim and the propriety of the application of 9 statutory damages to this situation. See Joe Hand Promotions, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS
 10 12159, supra. Here, Hyatt's use of the Article in this case is arguably a non-infringing fair use,
 11 as has been true of other cases before this Court. Righthaven LLC v. Realty One Group, Inc., 38 12 Med. L. Rptr. 2441 (D. Nev. 2010) (finding the defendant's use of a LVRJ article to be non-13 infringing fair use).

14 Moreover, a finding that Hyatt was an innocent infringer – entirely appropriate on this 15 record – would limit his damages to only $200,<sup>12</sup> less than 1% of the baseline $30,000
 16 Righthaven seeks in its Motion (Doc. # 17),<sup>13</sup> or even nothing at all<sup>14</sup>. An innocent infringer is 17 entitled to a significant reduction in damages, even below the statutory minimum set forth in 17
 18 U.S.C. § 504(c). Pye v. Mitchell, 574 F.2d 476, 481 (9th Cir. 1978). In this case, Hyatt may 19 have believed he had an implied license to share the Article, as there was a link encouraging
 20 viewers to e-mail the Article to others on the page where it appeared. (Doc. # 1 Exh. 1.) In other 21 cases, this Court has considered the fact that the defendants were not aware of the content at 22 issue's original source, or that they did not have any notice that it was a third party's intellectual 23 property. See, e.g., Righthaven LLC v. Wilcox, Case No. 2:10-cv-01192, Def.'s Mtn. to Dismiss 24 at 3:3-4:6 (D. Nev. filed Sept. 10, 2010) (explaining how content of unknown origin could 25 appear on a defendant's website without his or her action or knowledge).

26
 27 <sup>12</sup> 17 U.S.C. § 504(c)(2).

<sup>13</sup> 200 divided by 30,000 is .00666, rounded to .007 – the equivalent of 0.7%.

<sup>14</sup> 17 U.S.C. § 406.

For the sake of other bloggers and even other defendants in pending Righthaven lawsuits, this Court's demarcation of a clear line in the sand will return a level of certainty to the emerging social and cultural force that is internet journalism. Left unchecked, the inexplicably steep upward trend in Righthaven's settlement demands, now reaching a crescendo with the Motion before this court for at least $30,000 in damages, is certain to chill internet users from expressing themselves where, as is common enough, they do not understand the far-from-intuitive limits of fair use of copyright-protected materials. Righthaven's copyright trolling will continue to have this effect until some kind of cap or limiting guideline is placed upon what Righthaven may recover for the alleged infringements of works with which it has essentially nothing to do and which it has pursued for almost a year. Such a constitutionally compelled limitation on damages will serve the important purpose of protecting expression and guarding the flow of information, commentary and expression of issues of public interest, consistent with Amicus' goals and the objectives of its constituency and with the First Amendment.

2. This Court Does Not Have Jurisdiction to Order a Domain Name Turnover in This Case.

Righthaven's request for this Court to order the turnover of Hyatt's domain name where the copyright infringement allegedly occurred – <1ce.org> – cannot be granted. Domain names are tremendously valuable assets to bloggers, and can accrue value because of their intrinsically high visibility (e.g., <news.com>), or acquired worth through the awareness and visits earned by high-quality or unique content, or some other selling proposition (e.g., <drudgereport.com>). Thus, a domain name is an important commodity to bloggers and one that must be protected, a blog's loss of its unique domain name would cripple it, if not destroy it outright. Thus, within the Ninth Circuit, domain names are regarded as intangible personal property that cannot be subject to turnover orders in copyright cases.<sup>15</sup> CRS Recovery, Inc. v. Laxton, 600 F.3d 1138, 1143-44 (9th Cir. 2010); Kremen v. Cohen, 337 F.3d 1024 (9th Cir. 2003). Like California's approach to intangible personal property, articulated in Kremen, Nevada recognizes it as something that embodies “every intangible benefit and prerogative susceptible of possession or disposition.” M.C. Multi-Family Dev., LLC v. Crestdale Assocs., Ltd., 193 P.3d 536, 543 (Nev. 2008), citing Kremen, 337 F.3d at 1030. Therefore, just as California’s property laws extend this protection to domain names, the rule of Crestdale compels the conclusion that Nevada, too, would extend the same protections to website domain names.

---

<sup>15</sup> Personal intangible property, including domain names, can be seized to satisfy an unpaid judgment. See Kremen, 337 F.3d at 1024. It is improper, however, for the Court to order a turnover of the property, especially when the Defendant has the option to pay (or not pay) and avoid a judgment in which the domain name may be seized. Id.

Indeed, the identicalness of Nevada’s and California’s law in this respect compels identical results. The remedy sought by Righthaven is only allowed in trademark cases, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 1125(d)(1)(C) and (d)(2)(D), where cybersquatting has occurred – a breach of trademark law that is utterly unrelated to copyright infringement, the only claim alleged in this case. See Caesar’s World, Inc. v. Milanian, 247 F. Supp. 2d 1171, 1206 (D. Nev. 2003) (recognizing domain transfer as a valid remedy solely for trademark infringement). Righthaven has not alleged trademark infringement here, nor could it do so on the facts presented. Thus, there is no legal basis for the Court to order Hyatt to transfer its <1ce.org> domain to Righthaven.

C. Attorney’s Fees May be Proper in Copyright Cases, But Not For Righthaven.

Righthaven should not be awarded attorneys’ fees or costs in this action. The Ninth Circuit allows its courts to authorize attorneys’ fees and costs to be awarded at their discretion in copyright cases, pursuant to 17 U.S.C. § 505. Love v. Associated Newspapers, Ltd., 611 F.3d 601, 614-15 (9th Cir. 2010). Such awards are not automatic. See Fogerty v. Fantasy, Inc., 510 U.S. 517, 534 (1994) (finding that attorneys’ fees and costs are not awarded as a matter of course under 17 U.S.C. § 505); Halicki Films, LLC v. Sanderson Sales & Mktg., 547 F.3d 1213, 1230-31 (9th Cir. 2008) (affirming the lower court’s refusal to award attorneys’ fees and costs under 18 U.S.C. § 505).

The facts weigh heavily against any award of attorneys’ fees or costs to Righthaven under 17 U.S.C. § 505. Righthaven’s success in this case is premised on an overmatched party’s total failure to appear, rather than the strength or cogency of its legal position or the sympathetic

1 factual nature of its dubious claims of harm. Because Hyatt could have asserted the fair use
2 defense and prevailed, particularly in light of this Court's Realty One Group decision, the Court
3 should be mindful of how a monstrous award here – even if only “symbolic” – would chill free
4 speech in other fair use cases. Righthaven's entire “business model” is premised on cheap, 5 exploitative litigation against mainly unschooled and defenseless individuals, described in 6 Sections I and II A hereof. It should bear the costs of litigating its cases as part of that business
7 model, as it was conceived to do. This factor weighs particularly heavily against Righthaven, as 8 it is not protecting content it created or invested in during its “useful life,” but bought 9 unspecified rights in works solely so it could sue Hyatt and others after trawling the Internet for 10 possible instances of infringement – a fee-generating litigation business. The needs of 11 compensation and deterrence weigh against Righthaven receiving any attorneys' fees or costs
12 award, for, if anything, it is Righthaven's conduct that should be deterred. Any compensation 13 for losses it never suffered should be derived solely in any damages award by this Court, which 14 should reflect the minimal-to-nonexistent harm Hyatt's conduct inflicted on Righthaven.

15 Indeed, it is not the intent of bloggers to “rip off” or damage the markets for the 16 publications that supply them with reporting and other facts that are used as the foundation for 17 commentary and other analysis. The “blogosphere” and traditional media exist in a symbiotic
18 relationship, in which blogs generate significant traffic to the sources they credit for works
19 created by the latter and give new life to what would otherwise be essentially dormant online 20 archives. Such traditional outlets recognize the benefit of bloggers to their online presences and 21 are in the best position, in their own right, to correct and manage bloggers who may overstep the 22 bounds of fair use – ideally in advance of initiating scorched-earth litigation. In 23 contradistinction, Righthaven, having never produced any content, is an outsider to this 24 relationship. Righthaven has no interest in protecting the market for content – only the market 25 for dubious copyright litigation conducive to shakedowns of individuals who have become 26 citizen journalists or commentators but will never be copyright experts.

1 To award attorneys' fees to Righthaven, which has premised its existence on acquiring 2 rights in order to sue others for infringement and whose primary source of revenue is settlements
3 and judgments generated by needless and completely avoidable litigation, would be a slap in the 4 face of the Copyright Act and would mock its very purpose. Amicus represents copyright 5 holders and supports the exercise of discretion by courts to award attorneys' fees and costs under 6 17 U.S.C. § 505 in appropriate cases. But Amicus opposes the award of fees and costs in this 7 case – and similar cases – because of the obvious dissimilarities between content creators and 8 Righthaven's exploitative use of intellectual property as litigation fodder. Copyrights exist to 9 protect creators and publishers – not create a secondary market for lawsuits.

10 Conclusion

11 Hyatt's damages in this case should be minimal, and Hyatt should not be required to pay
12 Righthaven's attorneys' fees or costs. Righthaven's entire model for existence is highly suspect 13 under prevailing copyright law in this District, especially with respect to the rights it acquires, if 14 any, from Stephens Media, and what right they give Righthaven to sue alleged infringers.
15 Righthaven protects nothing but itself and serves no purpose but to sue others who may have 16 valid defenses to infringement but, as in this case, cannot afford to raise them. It has no interest 17 in producing or protecting the market for original content. Righthaven is so divorced from the 18 original works that its actual damages are so minimal that even nominal damages will be far out 19 of proportion with Righthaven's actual harm. Similarly, as a litigation-creating machine, an 20 award of attorneys' fees to Righthaven would effectively be a double recovery.

21 Because of the complete and utter lack of harm experienced by Righthaven in such cases, 22 the damages it seeks via settlement and now by the pending Motion (Doc. # 17) are far out of 23 proportion to its actual financial harm. The proportions of Righthaven's desired recovery
24 compared to its actual harm are beyond those that have been authorized by the Supreme Court,
25 and due process compels their reduction. As in Tenenbaum and Thomas-Rassett, willful
26 infringer cases that did not have the compelling First Amendment defenses available to Hyatt
27 and similarly situated defendants, this Court should set a defined limit as to what due process

1 will allow for recovery, and that limit should be as close as possible to the Copyright Act's
2 statutory minimum damages of $750. As for Righthaven's request to have the Court order
3 <1ce.org>'s turnover from Hyatt to Righthaven, such a remedy is not available in this case.

4 While individual courts within the Ninth Circuit have discretion to authorize awards of 5 attorneys' fees and costs under 17 U.S.C. § 505, this case does not warrant such an award in 6 Righthaven's favor. All of the factors for determining whether an award should be given to a 7 prevailing party weigh against Righthaven in Hyatt's favor. While this decision is ultimately the 8 Court's, it is consistent with precedent to deny this relief to Righthaven.

9
10 Dated February 23, 2011

Respectfully Submitted,
RANDAZZA LEGAL GROUP

11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

---

J. Malcolm DeVoy IV
Marc J. Randazza

Co-Counsel:
Ronald D. Coleman
GOETZ FITZPATRICK LLP

*Attorneys for Amicus Curiae,
Media Bloggers Association*

---